

Title: More Beautiful Immanuel Approach with Kids

May 5, 2021

Greetings all,

Here's another note from the same single mom who's story I shared last week (again, with permission to share). Thought it would be an encouragement.

Blessings,

"I just want to tell you a quick epilogue to the bloody head story! It was the most significant interaction I've watched my 9 year old have with Jesus, so I don't want to refrain from sharing!

This weekend again, my oldest son accidentally smashed his younger brother's finger in the door. (Causing another injury to him a week after the bloody head incident.)

This second situation led to a deeper healing for my oldest when he was able to name to Jesus that he feels like a really big failure in these instances (and a few others where his lack of awareness caused an injury to his brother.)

He sat in front of me and cried as he shared his feelings with Jesus. He told Jesus, "I think I'm the only failure ever" ...Then I watched Jesus show him person after person in the Bible who were also failures. He then looked at me with surprise and a smirk and said "Mom, I think everyone in the Bible were failures too!"

Next we asked Jesus how He feels towards failures. And my son started smiling so big and said "Jesus loves failures... He loves me, mom!"

His countenance changed so much, and he was affectionate and smiley all night. I know his heart was really touched by Jesus.

So. much. goodness."
